Preamble

Dear Readers,

This guide aims to give an overview of the different types of additional scholarships and funding options relevant to doctoral students already enrolled at BerGSAS who are scholarship holders or have a part-time position. Besides a short text explaining each of the various types, we also supply you with a list for each category, which you can navigate by using Ctrl/Strg + left click on the names in the table of contents.

Please note that you should always talk to the institution currently financing you first, in order to avoid breaking their rules, and because most already offer the types of funding listed here. This overview does not include funding options that are only open to students that already hold scholarships by specific institutions. At least in principle (restrictions on gender, academic performance, financial status, university, field and more apply) all options listed here are open to everyone.

Also not covered here are full doctoral scholarships (for more information you may take a look at the HU "financing your doctorate" brochure 210719financing-your-doctorate.pdf, or the various scholarship databases), PreDoc scholarships which serve to help students develop their project in the first place (e.g. PreDoc scholarships • Berliner Antike-Kolleg).

Disclaimer: Please note that this list is by no means exhaustive, and that we do not guarantee for the accuracy of dates, numbers and other information listed here.

As the funding landscape is constantly in flux, we strongly recommend that you do your own research as well, using resources such as H-Soz-Kult (Stipendien | H-Soz-Kult. Kommunikation und Fachinformation für die Geschichtswissenschaften | Geschichte im Netz | History in the web)

If you are aware of any changes, or know of additional institutions that provide the types of funding covered here, please let us know at regina.attula@berliner-antike-kolleg.org so we can update the guide.

We wish you the best of luck with financing your studies!

Finalisation Scholarships “Abschlussförderung”

The following resources might be of use to you, if your doctoral scholarship has run out, or your work contract has expired, but you have yet to finish your doctoral dissertation.

There are a number of options, which we would like to inform you about. Please note that most of these institutions have high requirements regarding the quality of your doctoral dissertation and final grade of your master’s degree. Often you will also be required to convincingly lay out why you were unable to complete your doctoral project in the initial time frame. Further restrictions based on e.g., gender, parental status, university, previous funding and more might apply.

Please always speak to the institution currently financing you first, to see if an extension is possible. Inform yourself in good time.

Disclaimer: This overview does not assert to cover all available forms of Abschlussförderung, it merely aims to give an overview of the most common options. Furthermore, we cannot guarantee that the dates and numbers listed here, are correct.

Printing Cost Subsidies “Druckkostenzuschüsse”

In Germany students are required to publish their doctoral dissertation before they can carry the “Doktor” Title. Depending on your programme regulations “Studienordnung” you may have the following options: Publication with an accredited publisher (e.g., print, print on-demand, open access), self-publication (this can be as simple as printing it in a copy shop), Publication on Microfilm, or upload to the online repository of your university. All but the last option usually come with certain costs, that can reach into the thousands depending on the number of copies required, the page count, and other factors such as colour and number of illustrations. To help you with this, many scholarships (including Finalisation Scholarships) offer financial support. At times having participated in a project or having received smaller previous grants can be enough to qualify. On the contrary all printing cost subsidies listed here, are not exclusive to holders of specific scholarships. In case the fund is limited to electronic (open access) publications, the money can often be used for Editing/Proofreading fees. Almost all printing cost subsidy grants require a quote or contract by a publisher, but at the same time printing should not have started before the application is accepted.

The BerGSAS occasionally offers Seminars that provide more information regarding publishing your dissertation.

Travel Grants / Short-Term Fellowships

As part of your dissertation project, it might be necessary for you to travel, be it to excavation sites and archives or symposia, workshops and conferences. To help you cover the costs, various institutions offer travel grants, of varying amounts and under different conditions.
Some of the listed opportunities are Fellowships which may come with the obligation to participate and stay (free of charge) at a specific research institution, while others are more flexible. The Name of the Program does not necessarily point towards either type. For more information, read the "criteria" section of each list item.

As with the other types of additional funding, it is always best to inform yourself about such possibilities at your current and past financing institutions first, as many of the best and most attainable grants are offered only internally.
The opportunities listed here are, at least in principle, open to anyone. Please note that you should always safeguard the receipts of all your incurred costs.

- This section has not been finalized, as with the other chapters: do your own research! –

Notes: It seems like successful applicants need to enroll as guest students at a Turkish university, please verify if this scholarship aligns with your research aims

Awards „Preise“

Awards are not just important because of their monetary value, but also because of the immensely positive impact they can have on a researcher's reputation. Some accept only smaller articles, others are specifically geared to dissertations, and still others consider published books by researchers of all levels. The exact requirements therefore vary drastically, but the common denominator is the fact that the work needs to be finished (often already published) and particularly excellent. We urge you to apply for awards, as many previous BerGSAS students have successfully done so.
